

Like everybody else we're having to accept that food prices are increasing dramatically. But the increases don't seem to be consistent. A Medium Chicken which was £2.29 less than a year ago is now £3.99. However Lamb which has always been a Budget Breaker doesn't seem to have increased in price to the same extent. When I have time I generally buy the ?Protein? component first and we then build a recipe around it. So I'm now looking at the meats / cuts which used to be unaffordable, as we're actually getting better flavours and better cuts than if we stick to what were to ?In Budget? offerings. If we've got to accept that staying within our £4 for 2 people daily budget is now almost impossible, we might just as well eat better slightly over budget.

These Lamb Breast cuts were £2.50 each and there was probably enough meat on one to share comfortably.
